AROUSING GREAT INTEREST

Teachers Contest Resembles Big Political Battle.

HUSTLING FOR VOTES

Friends of the Different Candidates Are Hard at Work and are Leaving No Stone Unturned to Bring Victory to Their Favorite.

REMEMBER TIME LIMIT ON BALLOTS.

"Tall Oaks from little acorns grow" might be changed to "big scores from small beginning sprouts," if the vote in the Bellefonte Republican World's Fair contest is a criterion. Several of the candidates who were for behind in the start-off have made rapid gains and are now well toward the top. The leaders are having hard work to hold their own at the present time as those who are behind are straining every nerve to decrease the distance between them.

Ballots are pouring in from all over the county faster than ever, and a number of the candidates are putting themselves in a position where it will take hard work to beat them.

In every town and hamlet in the county the contest is arousing deep interest, and several of the candidates are receiving votes from persons they never have seen. In many respects it resembles a political campaign.

Gum-shoe methods have been adopted by many of the contestants and they are putting forth every effort to capture the ballots.

Every candidate is assisted in her campaign by her friends.

Up to the present time speech-making has not been resorted to, and so far no torchlight processions have taken place.

The women have found the quiet "buttonholing" plan the most effective, and they are working it for all its worth.

There is a time limit on all ballots. Ballots issued for money paid on subscriptions can be held 15 days. Coupons cut from the paper must be turned in within ten days.

A coupon good for 40 votes will be given on every dollar paid before May 15, but if the dollar is paid on a new subscription an additional coupon good for 10 votes will be given.

OUR BORO FATHERS.

They met Monday Night and Transacted Important Business.

The regular meeting of council was held Monday evening commencing at 7:30. President Jenkins was in the chair with the following members present: Mallory, Fenlon, Seibert, Wise, Keichline, Derstine, Keller and Kirk.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read by the clerk, Mr. Kelley, and approved.

Wallace Keeler and Isaac Sager, both made application for permission to sprinkle Allegheny street from Parrish's drug store to Bishop street.

Chairman Derstine, of Street committee, reported repairs to streets. The new bridge over the Buffalo Run has been rebuilt. It was a good job.

Chairman Fenlon, of the Water committee, made a report containing a new water rate for the coming year.

Chairman Kirk, of the Finance committee, had several reports to hand in. Collector S. D Ray had a proposition to make looking to the settlement of the outstanding taxes of '90 to '94. Captain Taylor also reported that he would collect $2,000 on his duplicate during coming year.

The boro's note for $4,000 was ordered renewed for sixty days and an order drawn for the interest. The note is in the Centre County Bank.

Mr. Seibert stated that he desired to set the new water wheel at the water works and asked that some action be taken in regard to the dam below the spring. Several years ago the owners of the water right raised the dam by placing strips thereon. This it is claimed they had no right to do. Council decided to notify them to remove the strips.

The proposition of Mr. Ray was referred to Finance committee and boro Solicitor for settlement.

Wallace Keeler was granted the right to sprinkle Allegheny street during the coming summer.

Council approved the new water rate as recommended by the Water committee. All consumers in the boro who use water for mechanical purposes will pay by meter at the rate of 5 cents per thousand gallons. The water rent must be paid quarterly and none will be less than $1.50 per quarter. Outside of the boro none will be charged less than $2,00 per quarter and all in excess of 10,000 gallons will be charged 20 cents per thousand gallons. For private consumers the rate is the same as last year..

CRUSHED TO DEATH!

Sad Ending of the Earthly Career of Jeremiah Nolan.

RAILROADED 38 YEARS

Was Crushed Between Tender and Platform While Oiling His Engine at State College, Thursday Evening,

DIED AT THE BELLEFONTE HOSPITAL.

One of the saddest deaths that has occurred in Bellefonte for some time was that of engineer Jerry Nolan, which occurred in the Bellefonte Hospital Friday morning at 1:32 o'clock as a result of injuries accidentally received Thursday evening at State College.

Mr Nolan who was the engineer in charge of the afternoon passenger train on the Bellefonte Central railroad had just pulled into the State College station from Pine Grove Mills, and while they were unloading the scenery belonging to the Thespians he got down out of the cab to oil his engine, a thing he had done hundreds of times before at just the same place. He was standing between the engine and the station platform when in order to facilitate the unloading of the scenery a signal was given the fireman to pull ahead. Mr. Nolan was caught between the tender of the engine and the platform rolling the body along until the end of the platform was reached. His body was badly squeezed and his spine fractured. He was placed on board the train and brought to Bellefonte and at once taken to the hospital where every attention possible was given him. Although suffering great pain he retained consciousness until the end, his last words being addressed to his daughter Anna, asking her if her mother was reconciled and he passed away repeating the Lord's prayer. The accident happened at just 5:45 o'clock.

JERRY NOLAN,
The Veteran Railroad Engineer Who Died Here Last Friday.

Jeremiah Luke Nolan was one of the best known and most popular railroad men in this section of the country. He was born at Curtin's Works, Centre Co. June 11, 1847, making his age at time of death 56 years, 10 months and 4 days. For 38 years he has followed railroading, 2 years as a fireman and 36 years as an engineer. He was engineer on the Snow Shoe road from 1868 to 1885. In 1886 when the Bellefonte Central was first built he became their most trusted employee and was with them ever since, a period of eighteen years. During his life as an engineer he had several narrow escapes from death. The most serious accident he was ever in took place at Fountain station on the Snow Shoe road eighteen years ago. His train plunged over a steep embankment and his fireman, William Little and his conductor, Calvin McMullen were both killed. Nolan escaped with his life although badly injured.

He was a member of St. John's Catholic church of this place. He was also a member of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, No 467 of Tyrone.

He was the son of Patrick and Eleanor Nolan. In 1868 he was married to Miss Henrietta Walker of Snow Shoe, who survives him with the following children; Edward, James, Elizabeth, Rebecca, Mary, Joseph, Anna, Boyd, of Bellefonte; John and Daniel, of Tyrone.

He also leaves three sisters, Mrs. Mary Reber and Mrs. Thomas Hickey, of Butte, Montana; Mrs. Michael Murphy, of Emporium, Pa.

The death of Engineer Nolan has caused universal regret in this community. To know him was to like him, and liking him you became his firm friend. He had many just such friends who will join with the bereaved family in sincerely mourning the death of this noble hearted, honest man.

The funeral took place Tuesday morning at ten o'clock from St. John's Catholic church, the services being conducted by Rev. P. McArdle, the pastor.

The church was crowded with friends of the deceased and the services were quite impressive. At the close of the service Mrs. Lena Brown sang a beautiful solo entitled "After Toiling Cometh Rest."

The casket bearers were Irvin Ward, J. E. Stewart, W. H. Hase, J. H. Trout, Charles Stratiff and Scott C. Smith, all members of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, No 467, Tyrone.

The honary pall-bearers were Ogle Burley, of Tyrone; Claude Thompson, Edward Whittaker, of Bellefonte; Theodore Van Scoyoc, of Tyrone; G. W. Rose, No 52, Sunbury; and Howard Crane, No 287 Altoona, all members of the Brotherhood of Engineers.

The floral offerings were superb, among the great variety was a headlight of white carnations and roses from the Brotherhood men and bouquets from laundry employees, Joseph Kelleher, John Cherry, Charles Keichline, American Lime and Stone Company, Harry Otto, Mrs. Aggie Kean, Harper Brothers, Mrs. Mary Nolan, Stella Nolan Johnson, James Nolan, L. M. Johnson. There was also a bed of roses from the employees of the Bellefonte Central road.

Among those who attended the funeral from a distance were Mr. and Mrs. Michael Conley, Snow Shoe, Mrs. Michael Murphy, Emporium; Edward McNerney, Siglersville; John McNerney and daughter, Clearfield; Mrs. Victoria Temple, Pittsburg; Mrs. Katherine Lambert, Williamsport; Edward Walker and daughter, Miss Urania, of Brisben, Pa.

ACADEMY DEFEATED.

State College Scrub Team too Much for the Boys on the Hill.

The opening game of the base ball season took place Saturday afternoon on the Glass Works Meadow, between the Bellefonte Academy and the State College scrub team. The ground was in splendid condition and a large and enthusiastic crowd was present. The College team had in it Varsity material Sankey and Newton and succeeded in winning by the score of 11 to 3. The visitors showed in their batting the advantage of their long practice with the Varsity men. This is where they excelled the Academy and thereby won the game. The boys on the hill have had very little opportunity so far to get good batting practice. They will necessarily improve in this important part of the game as the season advances. The Academy boys showed that they have the material to develop into the best nine they have ever had. Burns pitched the first part of the game and was but fairly hard by the experienced batters of the scrub team. Sharp pitched the latter part and proved invincible.

HALL-HESS

George M. Hall and Miss Freda Hess Married at Aurora, Ill.

George M. Hall, of Huntingdon, and Miss Freda Hess, of Linden Hall, were married Wednesday evening, April 6th, at eight o'clock at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Laura M. Hess, 48 Wilder St., Aurora, Illinois. Owing to the recent death of the bride's grandfather, the wedding was a quiet one.

Mr. and Mrs. Hall after a wedding trip of two weeks through the western states, will be at home about the twenty-first at Linden Hall. After spending a week there and at Huntingdon they will leave for their new home in Elkins, West Virginia, where the groom is engaged in the lumber business, and has a house already furnished for his bride.

THE STRIKING COAL MINERS

Marching the Streets Armed to the Teeth.

OUTBREAK EXPECTED

Home of a Striker Burned and two Women and Four Children Perished in the Flames.

ITALIANS ARE STRONGLY SUSPECTED

SOMERSET, Pa., April 20.—An out break even more disastrous than the riot at Boswell in last January, has been hourly expected at Garrett, the scene of operations of the Garrett Coal company, the Somerset Coal company, and other lesser operations. Trouble has been brewing there ever since the inauguration of the miners' strike five months ago. A number of the striking miners at Garrett own homes there, but recently the Garrett Coal company erected a number of houses, and the bringing of new men to occupy these houses and take the places of the strikers in the mines has worked the latter up to a high state of excitement and resentment, and for the past few days the town has been a veritable mine of indignation that might easily be exploded, with probably the result of great loss of life and property. The strikers have been parading the streets openly armed, and they have prevented the moving of the household goods of in-coming miners from the railroad station to the new company houses.

A horror that may or may not be connected with the strike situation at Garrett was the burning to death of two women and four children in their home at that place between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock Tuesday morning. The victims were:

Mrs. Rosanna Meyers, her two daughters, Lucinda and Annie, aged 30 and 8 years, respectively, and her son Richard, aged 5 years.

The two other victims were young children of Lucinda. The house was a one and one-half story log building, and the women and children were sleeping in the upper story. Mr. Meyers and Jonas Sullivan, a boarder, were asleep on the first floor. They were awakened by the smoke and the noise made the fire, and had barely time to save their lives by rushing from the building.

The victims in the upper story perished without help, and their bodies were all reduced to ashes. The origin of the fire is unknown. It may never be known, but rumor connects it with the troubles growing out of the miners' strike. One story is that evidences of the fire were discovered on the interior of the building while it was burning. Meyers, the head of the household, was a miner, and until recently worked for the Somerset Coal company.

A. M. E. Pastor Installed in New Home

On Thursday evening a large number of the A. M. E., church people assembled at the new parsonage corner of Lamb and Ridge streets to welcome their pastor into his new home which they recently purchased as church property.

Mr. William Mills seemed to have been the promoter and leader of this most pleasing undertaking. All seemed to have enjoyed a most pleasant evening and on taking their departure Mr. Mills made a very timely presentation speech of the good things left behind for the family's comfort to which Rev. J. E. Morris with a heart full of joy and thankfullness responded.

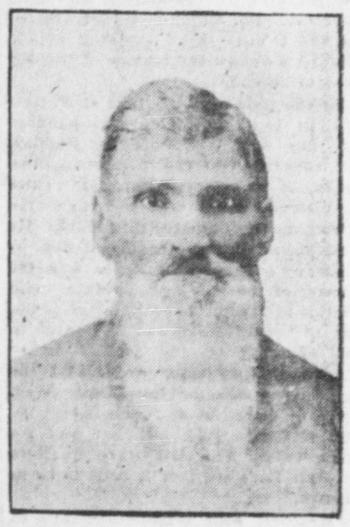
WILLIAM McCAFFERTY.

One of Our Town's Oldest Residents is Dead.

It is with sincere regret that we chronicle the death of William McCafferty, one of Bellefonte's oldest citizens, which sad event happened Thursday evening at 6 o'clock at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Edward Swiler on Beaver street. His death was due to the infirmities of old age.

The deceased was born in Dublin, Ireland on the 2nd of April 1818 making him past 86 years of age. He was the son of James and Julia McCafferty and with his parents came to this country when but 3 years old. In many respects he was a remarkable man having been a cripple since 1863. In that year he was working on the Snow Shoe railroad for his brother,



WILLIAM McCAFFERTY,
One of the Town's Oldest Citizens who Died at the Age of 86.

Charles, when two large rocks fell on him injuring him severely. The injury caused white swelling and 63 pieces of bone were taken from his leg.

He was married twice both wives being dead. The first wife was Miss Ruth McCune and the second, Mrs. Lavinia Goodfellow.

He is survived by two children, Mrs. Chas. Levy and Mrs. Edward Swiler, both of this place. He also leaves two brothers and a sister, namely, Charles, of Philadelphia, Mrs. Susan Powers and Thomas, of Bellefonte.

During the civil war he was a member of Co F, 23nd Regiment of which H. N. McCallister was Captain.

He was a member of St. John's Catholic church and the funeral took place from the church Monday morning at 10 o'clock. The services which were conducted by Rev. P. McArdle were quite impressive and were largely attended. The requeim mass was said by the pastor who also spoke very highly of the departed one.

Thirty years ago the deceased purchased the ground in the Catholic cemetery where the burial took place.

The pall-bearers were Thomas Donachy, Mertie Cunningham, Monroe Armor, Charles Eckenroth, James Gallagher and S. M. McMurtrie.

Wedding Bells Peal Forth.

On Thursday evening at 7:30 o'clock Mr. Luther Smith and Miss Effie Derr were united in marriage by Rev. Ambrose Schmidt at the St. John's Reformed parsonage on Spring street. Both of the above mentioned young people are well known in Bellefonte and have hosts of friends who wish them unbounded happiness through life.

Miss Bessie Crouse and Mr. Charles Anderson acted as bridesmaid and best man to the bride and groom. After the ceremony the bridal party were driven to the Alexander home where Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Straub had prepared an excellent wedding dinner. The bride received many beautiful and useful gifts.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith left Friday on the 1:05 train for an extended wedding tour through some of our western cities.

A Monster Compound Engine.

A compound engine of extremely high speed and power, built for the Pennsylvania railroad for the purpose of exhibiting at the World's Fair, by a firm in France has reached Altoona. It was shipped in sections, six large flat cars being required to convey it to New York. It is being put together at the Juniata shop and will be ready for operation and shipment to St. Louis in about 10 days. The length of the engine is 71 feet. It is painted red and black and will be changed to the company's standard color. A feature is that there is no pilot attached.

and soon swarmed about the schooner in hundreds. Hardly a half minute passed that one of the four Chinamen that were fishing did not signal a catch, and Charlie and Jim were kept busy with spade and gaff. By noon the deck tubs were full. The lines were hauled in, and the hands set the tubs in the sun to try out the oil. Under the tropical heat the shark livers almost visibly melted away, and by 4 o'clock in the afternoon the tubs were full of a thick, yellow oil, the reek of which instantly recalled to Wilbur's mind the rancid smell of the schooner on the day when he had first come aboard of her. The deck tubs were emptied into a hogshead and vats that stood in the waist of the Bertha, the tubs scoured and the lines and bent shark hooks overhauled. Charlie disappeared in the galley, supper was cooked and eaten upon deck under the conflagration of the sunset, the lights were set, the Chinamen foregathered in the fo'c'stle head smoking opium, and by 8 o'clock the routine of the day was at an end.

So the time passed. In a short time Wilbur could not have said whether the day was Wednesday or Sunday. He soon tired of the unsportsmanlike work of killing the sluggish brutes and turned shoreward to relieve the monotony of the succeeding days. He and Moran were left a good deal to their own devices. Charlie was the master of the men now. "Mate," said Moran to Wilbur one day after a dinner of turtle steaks and fish eaten in the open air on the quarter deck—"mate, this is slow work, and the schooner smells terribly foul. We'll have the dory out and go ashore. We can tumble a cask into her and get some water. The butt's three-quarters empty. Let's see how it feels to be in Mexico."

"Mexico?" said Wilbur. "That's so—Lower California is Mexico. I'd forgotten that!"

They went ashore and spent the afternoon in filling the water cask from the fresh water stream and in gathering abalones, which Moran declared were delicious eating, from the rocks left bare by the tide. But nothing could have exceeded the loneliness of that shore and back land, palpitating under the flogging of a tropical sun. Low hills of sand covered with brush stretched back from the shore. On the eastern horizon, leagues distant, blue masses of mountains striated with mirages swam in the scorching air.

The sand was like fire to the touch. Far out in the bay the schooner hung motionless under bare sticks, resting apparently upon her inverted shadow only. And that was all—the flat, heat ridden land, the sheen of the open Pacific and the lonely schooner.

"Quiet enough," said Wilbur in a low voice, wondering if there was such a place as San Francisco, with its paved streets and cable cars, and if people who had been his friends there had ever had any real existence.

"Do you like it?" asked Moran quickly, facing him, her thumbs in her belt.

"It's good fun. How about you?"

"It's no different than the only life I've known. I suppose you think it's a queer kind of a life for a girl. I've lived by doing things, not by thinking things or reading about what other people have done or thought, and I guess it's what you do that counts rather than what you think or read about. Where's that pinch bar? We'll get a couple more abalones for supper and then put off."

That was the only talk of moment they had during the afternoon. All the rest of their conversation had been of those things that immediately occupied their attention.

They regained the schooner toward 5 o'clock, to find the Chinamen perplexed and mystified. No explanation was forthcoming, and Charlie gave them supper in preoccupied silence. As they were eating the abalones, which Moran had fried in batter, Charlie said:

"Shark all gone! No more catch um—him all gone."

"Gone—why?"

"No savvy," said Charlie. "No likee, no likee. China boy tinkum heap funny; too much heap funny."

It was true. During all the next day not a shark was in sight, and though the crew fished assiduously till dark they were rewarded by not so much as a bite. No one could offer any explanation.

"'Tis strange," said Moran. "Never heard of shark leaving this feed before. And you can see with half an eye that the hands don't like the looks of it. Superstitious beggars! They need to be clumped in the head!"

That same night Wilbur woke in his hammock on the fo'c'stle head about half past 2. The moon was down, the sky one powder of stars. There was not a breath of wind. It was so still that he could hear some large fish playing and breaking off toward the shore. Then, without the least warning, he felt the schooner begin to lift under him. He rolled out of his hammock and stood on the deck. There could be no doubt of it—the whole forepart was rising beneath him. He could see the bowsprit moving upward from star to star. Still the schooner lifted; objects on deck began to slide aft; the oil in the deck tubs washed over; then, as there came a wild scrambling of the Chinese crew up the fo'c'stle hatch, she settled again, gradually at first, then, with an abrupt lurch that almost threw him from his feet, regained her level. Moran met him in the waist. Charlie came running aft.

"What was that? Are we grounding? Has she struck?"

"No, no. We are still fast to the kelp. Was it a tidal wave?"

"Nonsense! It wouldn't have handled us that way."

"Well, what was it? Listen! For heaven's sake, keep quiet there forward!"

Wilbur looked over the side into the water. The ripples were still chasing themselves away from the schooner. There was nothing else. The stillness shut down again. There was not a sound.

CHAPTER VI.

In spite of his best efforts at self control Wilbur felt a slow, cold clutch at his heart. That sickening, uncanny lifting of the schooner out of the glassy water at a time when there was not enough wind to so much as wrinkle the surface sent a creep of something very like horror through all his flesh.

Again he peered over the side down into the kelp thickened sea. Nothing—not a breath of air was stirring. The gray light that flooded down from the stars showed not a break upon the surface of Magdalena bay. On shore nothing moved.

"Quiet there, forward!" called Moran to the shrill voiced coolies.

The succeeding stillness was profound. All on board listened intently. The water dripped like the ticking of a clock from the Bertha Milliner's stern, which with the rising of the bow had sunk almost to the rail. There was no other sound.

"Strange!" muttered Moran, her brows contracting.

Charlie broke the silence with a wail. "No likee, no likee!" he cried at top voice.

The man had gone suddenly green. Wilbur could see the shine of his eyes, distended like those of a harassed cat. As he, Moran and Wilbur stood in the schooner's waist, staring at each other, the smell of punk came to their nostrils. Forward the coolies were already burning joss sticks on the fo'c'stle head, kotowing their foreheads to the deck.

Moran went forward and kicked them to their feet and hurled their joss sticks into the sea.

"Feng shui! Feng shui!" they exclaimed with bated breaths. "The Feng shui no likee we."

Low in the east the horizon began to blacken against the sky. It was early morning. A watch was set, the Chinamen sent below, and until daybreak, when Charlie began to make a clattering of tins in the galley as he set about preparing breakfast, Wilbur paced the rounds of the schooner, looking, listening and waiting again for that slow, horrifying lift. But the rest of the night was without incident.

After breakfast the strangely assorted trio—Charlie, Moran and Wilbur—held another conference in the cabin. It was decided to move the schooner to the other side of the bay.

"Feng shui in disa place. No likee we," announced Charlie.

"Feng shui—who are they?"

Charlie promptly became incoherent on this subject, and Moran and Wilbut could only guess that the Feng shui were the tutelary dieties that presided over that portion of Magdalena bay. At any rate, there were evidently no more shark to be caught in that fishing ground. So sail was made, and by noon the Bertha Milliner tied up to the kelp on the opposite side of the inlet, about half a mile from the shore.

The shark were plentiful here, and the fishing went forward again as before. Certain of these shark were hauled aboard, stunned by a blow on the nose and their fins cut off. The Chinamen packed these fins away in separate kegs. Eventually they would be sent to China.

Two or three days passed. The hands kept steadily at their work. Nothing more occurred to disturb the monotony of the scorching days and soundless nights. The schooner sat as easily on the unbroken water as though built to the bottom. Soon the night watch was discontinued. During these days the three officers lived high. Turtle were plentiful, and what with their steaks and soups, the fried abalones, the sea fish, the really delicious shark fins and the quail that Charlie and Wilbur trapped along the shore, the trio had nothing to wish for in the way of table luxuries.

The shore was absolutely deserted as well as the back country—an unbroken wilderness of sand and sage. Half a dozen times Wilbur, wearying of his inaction aboard the schooner, made the entire circuit of the bay from point to point. Standing on one of the latter projections and looking out to the west, the Pacific appeared as empty of life as the land. Never a keel cut those waters, never a sail broke the edge of the horizon, never a feather of smoke spotted the sky where it whitened to meet the sea. Everything was empty—vast, unspeakably desolate—palpitating with heat.

Another week passed. Charlie began to complain that the sharks were growing scarce again.

"I think bimeby him go way, once a mo'."

That same night Wilbur, lying in his hammock, was awakened by a touch on his arm. He woke to see Moran beside him on the deck.

"Did you hear anything?" she said in a low voice, looking at him under her scowl.

"No, no!" he exclaimed, getting up, reaching for his wicker sandals. "Did you?"

"I thought so—something. Did you feel anything?"

"I've been asleep; I haven't noticed anything. Is it beginning again?"

"The schooner lifted again just now, very gently. I happened to be awake or I wouldn't have noticed it." They were talking in low voices, as is the custom of people speaking in the dark.

"There, what's that?" exclaimed Wilbur under his breath. A gentle vibration, barely perceptible, thrilled through the schooner. Under his hand that was clasped upon the rail Wilbur could feel a faint trembling in her frame. It stopped, began again and died slowly away.

"Well, what the deuce is it?" he muttered impatiently, trying to master the returning creep of dread.

Moran shook her head, biting her lip.

"It's beyond me," she said, frowning. "Can you see anything?" The sky, sea and land were unbroken reaches of solitude. There was no breath of wind.

"Listen," said Moran. Far off to landward came the faint, sleepy clucking of a quail and the stridulating of unnumbered crickets. A long ripple licked the slope of the beach and slid back into the ocean. Wilbur shook his head.

"Don't hear anything," he whispered. "Sh—there—she's trembling again."

Once more a prolonged but faint quivering ran through the Bertha Milliner from stem to stern and from keel to masthead. There was a barely audible creaking of joints and panels. The oil in the deck tubs trembled. The vibration was so fine and rapid that it tickled the soles of Wilbur's feet as he stood on the deck.

"I'd give two fingers to know what it all means," murmured Moran in a low voice. "I've been to sea for"—Then suddenly she cried aloud: "Steady, all! She's lifting again!"

The schooner heaved slowly under them, this time by the stern. Up she went, up and up, while Wilbur gripped at a stay to keep his place and tried to choke down his heart, that seemed to beat against his palate.

"Heavens!" ejaculated Moran, her eyes blazing. "This thing is"— The Bertha came suddenly down to an easy keel, rocking in that glassy sea as if in a tide rip. The deck was awash with oil. Far out in the bay the ripples widening from the schooner blurred the reflections of the stars. The Chinamen swarmed up the hatchway, voluble and shrill. Again the Bertha Milliner lifted and sank, the tubs sliding on the deck, the masts quivering like reeds, the timbers groaning aloud with the strain. In the stern something cracked and smashed. Then the trouble died away, the ripples faded into the ocean and the schooner settled to her keel, quite motionless.

"Look," said Moran, her face toward the Bertha's stern. "The rudder is out of the gudgeons." It was true—the Bertha Milliner's helm was unshipped.

There was no more sleep for any one on board that night. Wilbur tramped the quarter deck, sick with a feeling he dared not put a name to. Moran sat by the wrecked rudder head, a useless pistol in her hand, swearing under her breath from time to time. Charlie appeared on the quarter deck at intervals, looked at Wilbur and Moran with wide open eyes, and then took himself away. On the forward deck the coolies pasted strips of red paper inscribed with mottoes upon the mast and filled the air with the reek of their joss sticks.

"If one could only see what it was," growled Moran between her clinched teeth. "But this—this heaving and trembling, it—it's queer."

"That's it, that's it," said Wilbur quickly, facing her. "What are we going to do, Moran?"

"Stick it out!" she exclaimed, striking her knee with her fist. "We can't leave the schooner—I won't leave her. I'll stay by this dough dish as long as two planks in her hold together. Were you thinking of cutting away?" She fixed him with her frown.

Wilbur looked at her, sitting erect by the disabled rudder, her head bare, her braids of yellow hair hanging over her breast, sitting there in man's clothes and man's boots, the pistol at her side. He shook his head.

"I'm not leaving the Bertha till you do," he answered, adding, "I'll stand by you, mate, until we"—

"Feel that?" said Moran, holding up a hand.

A fine, quivering tremble was thrilling through every beam of the schooner, vibrating each rope like a harp string. It passed away, but before either Wilbur or Moran could comment upon it recommenced, this time much more perceptibly. Charlie dashed aft, his cue flying.

"W'at makum heap shake?" he shouted. "W'at for him shake? No savvy, no likee, pretty much heap fiald. Ale-yah, ale-yah!"

Slowly the schooner heaved up as though upon the crest of some huge wave, slowly it settled and again gradually lifted, till Wilbur had to catch at the rail to steady his footing. The quivering sensation increased so that their very teeth chattered with it. Below in the cabin they could hear small objects falling from the shelves and table. Then, with a sudden drop, the Bertha fell back to her keel again, the spilled oil spouting from her scuppers, the masts rocking, the water churning and splashing from her sides.

And that was all. There was no sound—nothing was in sight. There was only the frightened trembling of the little schooner and that long, slow heave and lift.

Morning came and breakfast was had in silence and grim perplexity. It was too late to think of getting away now that the rudder was disabled. The Bertha Milliner must bide where she was.

"And a little more of this dancing," exclaimed Moran, "and we'll have the planks springing off the sternpost."

Charlie nodded solemnly. He said nothing—his gravity had returned. Now in the glare of the tropical day, with the Bertha Milliner sitting the sea as placidly as a brooding gull, he was Talleyrand again.

"I tinkum yas," he said vaguely.

"Well, I think we had better try and fix the rudder and put back to Frisco," said Moran. "You're making no money this way. There are no shark to be caught. Something's wrong. They're gone away somewhere. The crew are eating their heads off and not earning enough money to pay for their keep. What do you think?"

"I tinkum yas."

"Then we'll go home. Is that it?"

"I tinkum yas—tomolia."

"Tomorrow?"

"Yas."

"That's settled then," persisted Moran, surprised at his ready acquiescence. "We start home tomorrow?" Charlie nodded.

"Tomolia," he said.

The rudder was not so badly damaged as they had at first supposed. The break was easily mended, but it was found necessary for one of the men to go over the side.

"Get over the side here, Jim," commanded Moran. "Charlie, tell him what's wanted. We can't work the pintle in from the deck."

But Charlie shook his head.

"Him no likee go; him plenty much fiald."

Moran ripped out an oath.

"What do I care if he's afraid! I want him to shove the pintle into the lower gudgeon. What carrion!" she exclaimed. "I'd sooner work a boat with she monkeys. Mr. Wilbur, I shall have to ask you to go over. I thought I was captain here, but it all depends on whether these rats are afraid or not."

"Plenty many shark," expostulated Charlie. "Him fiald shark come back, catchum chop-chop."

"Stand by here with a couple of cutting-in spades," cried Moran, "and fend off if you see any shark. Now, then, are you ready, mate?"

Wilbur took his determination in both hands, threw off his coat and sandals and went over the stern rail.

"Put your ear to the water," called Moran from above. "Sometimes you can hear their flukes."

It took but a minute to adjust the pintle, and Wilbur regained the deck again, dripping and a little pale. He knew not what horrid form of death might have been lurking for him down below there underneath the kelp. As he started forward for dry clothes he was surprised to observe that Moran was smiling at him, holding out her hand.

"That was well done," she said, "and thank you. I've seen older sailor men than you who wouldn't have taken the risk." Never before had she appeared more splendid in his eyes than at this moment. After changing his clothes in the fo'c'stle he sat for a long time, his chin in his hands, very thoughtful. Then at length, as though voicing the conclusion of his reflections, he said aloud as he rose to his feet:

"But of course that is out of the question."

He remembered that they were going home on the next day. Within a fortnight he would be in San Francisco again, a taxpayer, a police protected citizen once more. It had been good fun, after all, this three weeks' life on the Bertha Milliner, a strange episode cut out from the normal circle of his conventional life. He ran over the incidents of the cruise—Kitchell, the turtle hunt, the finding of the derelict, the dead captain, the squall and the awful sight of the sinking bark, Moran at the wheel, the grewsome business of the shark fishing, and, last of all, that inexplicable lifting and quivering of the schooner. He told himself that now he would probably never know the explanation of that mystery.

The day passed in preparations to put to sea again. The deck tubs and hogsheads were stowed below and the tackle cleared away. By evening all was ready; they would be under way by daybreak the next morning. There was a possibility of their being forced to tow the schooner out by means of the dory, so light were the airs inside. Once beyond the heads, however, they were sure of a breeze.

About 10 o'clock that night the same uncanny trembling ran through the schooner again, and about half an hour later she lifted gently once or twice. But after that she was undisturbed.

Later on in the night, or, rather, early in the morning, Wilbur woke suddenly in his hammock without knowing why and got up and stood listening. The Bertha Milliner was absolutely quiet. The night was hot and still. The new moon, canted over like a sinking galleon, was low over the horizon. Wilbur listened intently, for now at last he heard something.

Between the schooner and the shore a gentle sound of splashing came to his ears and an occasional crack as of oars in their locks. Was it possible that a boat was there between the schooner and the land? What boat, and manned by whom?

The creaking of oarlocks and the dip of paddles were unmistakable.

Suddenly Wilbur raised his voice in a great shout:

"Boat ahoy!"

There was no answer. The noise of oars grew fainter. Moran came running out of her cabin, swinging into her coat as she ran.

"What is it? What is it?"

"A boat, I think, right off the schooner here. Hark—there—did you hear the oars?"

"You're right. Call the hands. Get the dory over. We'll follow that boat right up. Hello, forward there! Charlie, all hands, tumble out!"

Then Wilbur and Moran caught themselves looking into each other's eyes. At once something—perhaps the latent silence of the schooner—told them there was to be no answer. The two ran forward. Moran swung herself into the fo'c'stle hatch and without using the ladder dropped to the deck below. In an instant her voice came up to the hatch:

"The bunks are empty—they're gone—abandoned us!" She came up the ladder again.

"Look," said Wilbur as she regained the deck. "The dory's gone. They've taken it. It was our only boat. We can't get ashore."

"Cowardly, superstitious rats, I should have expected this. They would be chopped in bits before they would stay longer on board this boat—they and their Feng shui."

When morning came the deserters could be made out camped on the shore, near to the beached dory. What their intentions were could not be conjectured. Ridden with all manner of nameless oriental superstitions, it was evident that the Chinamen preferred any hazard of fortune to remaining longer upon the schooner.

"Well, can we get along without them?" said Wilbur. "Can we two work the schooner back to port ourselves?"

"We'll try it on anyhow, mate," said Moran. "We might get her into San Diego anyhow."

The Chinamen had left plenty of provision on board, and Moran cooked breakfast. Fortunately, by 8 o'clock a very light westerly breeze came up. Moran and Wilbur cast off the gaskets and set the fore and main sails.

Wilbur was busy at the forward bitts preparing to cast loose from the kelp, and Moran had taken up her position at the wheel when suddenly she exclaimed:

"Sail ho! And in God's name what kind of a sail do you call it?"

In fact, a strange looking craft had just made her appearance at the entrance of Magdalena bay.

CHAPTER VII.

Wilbur returned aft and joined Moran on the quarter deck. She was already studying the stranger through the glass.

"That's a new build of boat to me," she muttered, giving Wilbur the glass. Wilbur looked long and carefully. The newcomer was of the size and much the same shape as a caravel of the fifteenth century—high as to bow and stern, and to all appearances as seaworthy as a soup tureen. Never but in the old prints had Wilbur seen such an extraordinary boat. She carried a single mast, which listed forward; her lugsail was stretched upon dozens of bamboo yards; she drew hardly any water. Two enormous red eyes were painted upon either side of her high, blunt bow, while just abaft the waist projected an enormous oar, or sweep, full forty feet in length—longer, in fact, than the vessel herself. It acted partly as a propeller, partly as a rudder.

"They're heading for us," commented Wilbur as Moran took the glass again.

"Right," she answered, adding upon the moment: "Hoh! More Chinamen. The thing is alive with coolies. She's a junk."

"Oh!" exclaimed Wilbur, recollecting some talk of Charlie's he had overheard. "I know."

"You know?"

"Yes. These are real beachcombers. I've heard of them along this coast—heard our Chinamen speak of them They beach that junk every night and camp on shore. They're scavengers, as you might say—pick up what they can find or plunder along shore—abalones, shark fins, pickings of wrecks, old brass and copper, seals, perhaps; turtle and shell. Between whiles they fish for shrimp, and I've heard Kitchell tell how they make pearls by dropping bird shot into oysters. They are Kalgingh to a man, and, according to Kitchell, the wickedest breed of cats that ever cut teeth."

HUNTINGTON PRESBYTERY,

Held its Annual Meeting in Tyrone the Past Week.

The organization of the presbytery Tuesday afternoon, was concluded by the election of Rev. J. E. Irvin, Ph D., of the Altoona third church, as permament secretary, and the length of term was fixed at three years. Rev. R. P. Miller, of Philipsburg, was elected reading clerk. The stated clerk is Rev. R. F Wilson, of Lewistown. Standing committees were appointed as follows:

Bills and overtures—Revs E. F. Johnston D. D., Wm. Laurie D. D., S. S. Bergen; Elders Prof. Keith and A. L. Hench.

Judical—Revs. J. C. Kelly, J. M. Waddell, H. W. Koebler; Elders S. S. Blair and C. P. Hatfield.

Minutes of Synod—Revs. W. H. Finney, Samuel Woodring; Elder F. B. Reed.

Finance—Elders F. B. Reed, A. T. Russell, J. A. B. Melvin.

Leave of Absence—Revs. W. K. Harnish, W. M. Jack D. D., Elder James Harris.

Rev. Frank Novak, a Bohemian, who is assigned to the work among the foreign element of the presbytery, gave an interesting talk and an encouraging report of his efforts in the field where he operates, Dr. Mathers having previously reported that Mr. Novak had been employed at a salary of $800 a year by the committee of presbytery vested with authority to do so.

At 7.45 o'clock Tuesday evening a public missionary service was held. Rev. L. M. Lewis, of Sinking Valley, presided and announced the hymns; Rev. W. L. Whallon, of Broad Avenue, Altoona, read the scripture lesson, Romans 10: 1-15; Rev. E. M. Bowman, of Hollidaysburg, offered the invocation; and a large choir rendered splendidly two anthems. An offering for missions was contributed.

The sermon by Rev. H. W. Koebler, Mount Union, from the text found in Romans 10: 13, 14, 15, was an earnest plea for missionary endeavor.

Wednesday morning's session of the presbytery opened with devotional exercises conducted by Rev. R. P. Miller, after which a report was heard from a committee having in charge an abandoned church building at Hublersburg, Centre county. The committee was authorized to dispose of it as they thought best.

Commissioners to the general assembly, which meets at Buffalo, N. Y., on the 19th of May, were elected as follows: Revs. R. M. Campbell, of Pennsylvania Furnace, and J. M. Waddell, of Clearfield; Elders George B. Porter, of Tyrone and Samuel P. Wishart, of Wells Valley.

Rev. R. F. Wilson offered the following.

Whereas, The Cumberland Presbyterian church does not hold the Calvanistic doctrines that our church does; and whereas, a large proportion of its ministry is uneducated in college and seminary studies; and whereas; two classes of presbyteries cover the same district Therefore.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this presbytery that the report of the committee on the union of the two churches should not be sent down to the presbyteries.

Dr. Laurie vigorously advocated the passage of the resolution, while Dr. Bain as earnestly supported, it, and Rev. Mr. Waddell thought it not the business of the presbytery to dictate to the general assembly what it should do. At this juncture a call was made for the taking up of the regular schedule, so the resolution was for the time set aside.

Presbyterial assessments of the churches at Kermoor and Kylertown, amounting to $12 and $14 respectively, were remitted. Dr. Mathers was re-elected a trustee, his term having expired. Statistical reports of the several churches of the presbytery were presented without reading. Rev. Sylvester S. Berger, made a statement concerning his work in his charges at Petersburg, Unionville and McElavy's Fort, and asked that he might have some volunteer help. Rev. W. F. Carson, in conformity with a wish expressed in a letter presented by the stated clerk, was granted a letter of dismissal from the presbytery, to be give him when he received a call from elsewhere. On account of illness he is not now preaching.

"The Forward Movement" was the subject of the Wednesday evening sermon by Rev. J. W. Bain, of Altoona.

TRADE STILL IRREGULAR!

Unseasonably Cool Weather the Chief Drawback.

MANY LABOR TROUBLES

Industrial Situation Has not Been Favorable—Iron Has Been Rather More Quiet.

COTTON GOODS INDUSTRY CURTAILED

New York, April 15.—Bradstreet's today will say: Trade is still irregular, with unseasonably cool weather the chief but not the only drawback. In some sections, notably the south portions of the east and west, brighter weather has helped trade and incidentally crop preparation, but the poor winter wheat crop outlook in the Ohio valley, very cool weather in the lake regions and high water or frosts in the western part of the cotton belt, have effected business or retarded spring planting. Foreign trade returns have seemed to favor the manufacturing rather than the agricultural interests.

Most measures of trade point to a smaller volume of business than a year ago.

The industrial situation has not been extremely favorable. Iron and steel, coal, coke, lumber and naval stores interests note increased activity in production and consumption or improved demand from various sources, but the cotton goods industry is curtailing production steadily. The building and other industries are marred by labor troubles, which, while not involving large numbers of men, result in annoying and expensive delays.

Iron is rather quieter this week, less eagerness to obtain supplies of pig being noted at several markets. Figures of consumption show marked increase in output in the past two months, with, however, no accumulation of stocks. Finished products are in good demand, but transactions in cars are expected.

Wheat, including flour exports for the week aggregate 1,213,855 bushels, against 1,854,370 last week, and 2,977,777 this week last year. From July 1, 1903, to date, they aggregate 119,050,859 bushels, against 179,782,553 last season. Corn exports for the week aggregate 583,339 bushels against 1,023,907 last week and 1677,621 a year ago. From July 1, 1903, to date they aggregate 48,135,585 bushels against 51,604,899 last season.

Business failures in the United States for the week number 198 against 201 last week and 160 in the like week in 1903.

Developed Smallpox in Williamsport Hotel.

Pierce Horr, a traveling salesman for a pulley company in Wisconsin, developed a case of smallpox Tuesday while stopping at a Williamsport hotel. He was locked in his room until the sanitary hospital was made ready for his reception in the afternoon. The room was thoroughly fumigated, and every precaution has been taken to prevent a spread of the disease. Horr has been traveling in the anthracite coal regions, where the disease is prevalent. The Williamsport people were just congratulating themselves that the city was free of smallpox.

Planting Trees for Profit.

State Forestry Commissioner Rothrock began last week the work of planting 50,000 additional locust trees for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Conewago. The 50,000 trees which were planted last fall are now being trimmed and a month will be required to complete the work. Arrangements have been made by the railroad company to plant, next fall, 200,000 more trees and the following spring 600,000 trees. Two thousand acres of land will be required and a tract of land one mile wide and two miles long will be covered by the trees.

These trees are being planted by the company for the purpose of producing cross ties and in the course of twenty years it is expected that 5,000,000 ties will be gotten from this vast forest.

What is being done by the railroad company can be done on a smaller scale by many individuals. There are many acres of unused territory that could be profitably planted to locust trees.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.)

Washington, D. C., April, 20 1904.

Such is the very natural anxiety of Congressmen to get home to their constituents that as the time draws near for adjournment a good deal of desirable legislation must be postponed until next December, and a number of perplexing question will have to wait for solution until after the Presidental election. The impeachment and trial of Judge Swayne, for instances, would consume a great deal of valuable time, and so must go over. Besides, the committee having the matter in charge desired fuller information, and for time for partisan feeling to subside. The question is wholly a judicial one, and should not be influenced by politics. The same is true of the case of Senate Smoot, who appears to be a very respectable man, whatever the Mormon Church may be. A body of dignified and elderly men, like the Senate of the United States, can hardly be expected to give snap judgement in such an important matter as religious belief. So, to, the case of Senator Burton, of Kansas, will probably be left as it now is until all the courts have passed upon his case, and if he does not resign he is likely to retain his seat through the vacation. With the clearing away of these, and other questions, and the subsidence of Democratic opposition to real business measures, Congress can be expected to proceed with expedition and finish its work by moving say "Hurly-burly First of May."

The Senate devoted Thursday to eulogizing Senator Hanna. A large audience crowded the galleries and many members of the House were present to hear the speeches. Senator Foraker, O., opened the exercises and Senator Dick of the same state closed them. While Mr. Foraker did not consider Hanna a statesman or a scholar, he admitted that he was a very loveable man, "ever ready to practice self denial." He could testify from experience that he has a good fighter, and very strenuous in carrying his points. Senator Scott related how wounded he was in his feelings over the diabolical cartoons which represented him as an unfeeling trust monster. Senators Cockrell, Mo., Platt, Conn., Callom, Ills., and Blackburn added each a leaf of laural to his crown of immortality. Senator Fairbanks read a carefully prepared oration, and at its close exhibited visible feelings of deep emotion. Senator Daniel followed with high praise for the Senator who, he said, came of old Virginia stock, and was an honest man who loved all sections of our common country. Senator Perkins, Cal., aided his tribute of praise and was followed by Beveridge, Ind., who preached a flowery sermon upon death and the future life. Senator Depew, in a very vigorous strain for so old a man, dwelt upon the business man and the multimillionaire in the Senate, defending their presence in that body. He referred to the great work Senator Hanna was interested in through the Civic Federation and his efforts to reconcile capital and labor. This speech was too much for the aged and he was taken ill upon its conclusion. Senator Dolliver, of Iowa, defended Hanna as vigorously as he had Postmaster General Payne a few days before. He regarded the departed Senator as a loveable, genial, broad-minded, man, who worked hard for the uplifting of mankind. He was deeply interested in the work of the Salvation Army and was the champion of the laboring man. Many interesting anecdotes were related of the great and good Senator and the vast audience listened with deep interest until the end.

A large number of magazine editors and writers, authors and artists, enjoyed a banquet, and subsequent speechmaking, in this city Thursday evening. The President arrived about 10 p. m. and was hailed as "the foremost author of them all." He greeted the magazine writers as "the real governing class" and said that "the people themselves are ultimately responsible for the government." He cautioned them against the spirit of "boastfulness," and he would have reform begin at home. The other speakers included the French and German, Ambassadors, Senator Beveridge, Dr. Henry Van Dyke, and Ex. Gov. Black of New York; who said many sharp things in a very epigrammatic manner. John Hay was there, also some of the justices of the Supreme Court, and some four hundred other men not unknown to fame.

The House committee on Labor has decided to let the eight hour bill go over until next December. This bill proposed to fix eight hours as a day's labor upon all Government contracts. In the hearings before the committee it met with much opposition by such men as Mr. Wallace Downey, a large ship builder; Mr. James M. Beck who was one of the Counsel for the trusts, in Merger case; the the Anti-Boycott association and the American Association of Manufacturers. They all declared the bill was loaded with dynamite and was unconstitutional. The whole matter has been referred to the Department of Labor with a request that it collect some very obsecure information

Through Bravado a Boy Loses His Life.

A 12 year-old boy named Justin was killed near Towanda, on the Williamsport and North Branch railroad, the other day. A companion dared him to run across the track in front of an approaching passenger train, and in doing so he was caught and terribly mangled. He died shortly after reaching the Sayre hospital.

A PRETTY WEDDING.

Mr. John Watson and Miss Anna McClellan United in Marriage.

The cozy home of Mr. and Mrs. William McClellan on East Lamb street was the scene of a very pretty event on Wednesday evening. It was the giving in holy bonds of wedlock of their daughter Anna to John Watson, of Milesburg.

Promptly at six o'clock Mr. Harry Breon, a noted musician, began playing the wedding march, one of his own composition, to which the bride and groom stepped to the altar and in beautiful and impressive words they were made man and wife. Rev. John A. Wood, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal church, spoke the words that made these young hearts beat as one.

The bride looked happy and was beautifully attired in a tan colored gown, and carried an exquisite bouquet of white bridal roses. The groom looked as though he was the happiest man on the earth, and he had a perfect right to feel so as he was getting for a wife a splendid help-mate through life.

The brides-maid was Miss Margaret McClellan, a sister of the bride and the groom was attended by his intimate friend, Mr. John Sheckler, of Milesburg as best man.

After the ceremony the guests repaired to the dining room where an excellent wedding dinner was served followed by a reception.

The parlor in which the ceremony was performed was beautifully decorated with ferns and palms interspersed with blooming plants.

Mr. and Mrs. Watson will not go away on a wedding tour until later in the summer as Mr. Watson was somewhat disabled a few days ago in a wreck on the Snow Shoe branch of the P. R.R.

They will go to house-keeping at Snow Shoe where the groom has a pretty home already for his bride.

This paper joins in with their many friends to wish them unbounded happiness and joy through life.

The New School Building at Beech Creek.

Beech Creek, April 16.—The school directors of this borough have awarded the contract for the erection of the new school building to Samuel Gault of Bellefonte, the lowest of six bidders. The work is to be begun at once. The stone for the foundations is on the ground and rapid progress in the work is expected. The contract calls for the completion of the building by the middle of August. The plans and specifications were made by Robert Cole of Bellefonte, the well known architect, designer of the Lock Haven Trust company building, the Fourth ward school building and the Lock Haven hospital. The plan adopted for the school building here calls for four rooms, all on one floor, two on either side of a hall. Each room will be 23x30 feet. The hall will be 24x36 feet and in the rear of it will be a library and directors' room 18x19 feet. Folding doors will allow two rooms to be thrown into one for institutes and entertainments. All rooms are to be wainscotted four feet high and the interior of the building will be finished in finest quality yellow pine. Each school room will have 50 lineal feet of slate blackboard 3 feet 6 inches wide. Each room will have its own cloak room. The latest and best system of ventilation and heating will be employed with hot air furnaces. The greater portion of the basement will be concreted and toilet rooms will be placed in the cellar. The exterior of the building will be encased with brick and roofed with slate. The building will stand rather high on its foundations and entrance will be in the middle front beneath a tower 65 feet in height.

Mr. Gault, who received the contract, is an experienced contractor and has built a number of school buildings, among which is the splendid building at Blanchard, designed by him also. The handsome new building, located in the very centre of the town will be an attractive structure and an object of pride for Beech Creek.

Heard Man Groan by the Roadside.

David Runkle of Pittsburg was found on the mountain between Centre Hall and Bellefonte. Thursday afternoon, in an unconscious condition. He was taken to Centre Hall, where it was found that he had sustained a paralytic stroke.

The sick man was found by D. H. Giess of Centre Hall and Thomas Grove. Mr. Giess was crossing the Nittany mountains, going from Bellefonte to his home, and when near the top of the mountain he heard the sound of some one moaning as though in great pain. The sounds apparently came from a little clearing near the road. Thomas Gross was working a short distance away and Mr. Geiss called to him and together the two men entered the woods and found the unconscious form of Mr. Runkle. He was lying on a blanket spread on the ground, with the cushion of a buggy used as a pillow. He had apparently felt sick and had driven in there, thinking that he would feel better in a short time. His horse had been blanketed, and was standing nearby.

He was taken to Centre Hall and given medical attention.

BOLD BURGLARS.

Attempted to Rob the Office at McCoy & Linn's.

One of the most daring attempts at burglary that has taken place in this vicinity for some time occured at McCoy & Linn's iron works about midnight on Friday. Edmund Blanchard, the Superintendent of the plant who stays at the house near the works had been in Bellefonte during the evening and was returning to his quarters about midnight. It was raining and he stopped at the office to get a suit of working clothes he had left there. When he opened the door he was startled to find some men in the office. He demanded to know what they were doing there when he was fired at, the ball passing through his coat sleeve and dropping to the floor where it was afterwards found. Blanchard beat a hasty retreat and securing assistance returned but it was too late then as the burglars had fled They were evidently surprised at their work and left without securing any plunder.

Thomas Ball's Sad Death.

Thomas Ball, a brakeman on the New York Central railroad, and who resided at Clearfield, was run over and killed by a trolley car about 12 o'clock Saturday night at a point a little below Munson. He was lying on the track, and not discovered by the motorman in time to stop the car. It is thought he was under the influence of liquor, and not conscious of his perilous condition when lying down on the track. There are some intimations that he may have been foully dealt with by unknown parties, and his body placed on the track to cover up the crime, but very little stress is placed upon such reports.

The unfortunate man had gone to Jersey Shore during the day, drawn his pay, and it is said had come to Munson to attend a funeral.

A wife and five children are left to mourn the death of a husband and father under the saddest of circumstances.

The Commencement Exercises at Blanchard.

The second annual commencement of the Liberty township High school of Blanchard consisted of special exercises held in the school building Tuesday and Wednesday evening April 12 and 13. Tuesday evening the graduates delivered their orations and every one did very well. Special music was one of the features of the program. The rooms were tastefully decorated with crimson and black, the class colors, and American flags. Girls of the junior class acted as ushers. The occasion was one of great pleasure for those in charge of the schools the graduates and their friends present. To Prof. Milford Pletcher, the principal, great credit is due for the undertaking of the commencement exercises which were an innovation.

Wednesday evening another large audience was in attendance. Special music by the choir and several orations preceded the address of the speaker of the occasion, Hon. John G. Love, president judge of Centre county. His honor held the closest attention of his hearers during his interesting and inspiring address. In the course of his remarks, the judge pointed out the way to higher and nobler things in all the vocations of life and showed how all progress and advancement is the result of higher education. He declared that the farmer must wake up, educate himself better in order that he may make the most of what science and chemistry offer him. He noted the great men of state and nation, who received their early education in the country schools, which with the country home are the bulwarks of the American people. His honor also took the opportunity to decry the extreme to which athletics, foot ball and base ball in particular, are being carried in preparatory schools, colleges and universities. Judge Love is an eloquent speaker and the opportunity to hear him was appreciated, many from this place being in the large audience. After the address of the judge, Prof. Pletcher presented each of the nine graduates with a diploma. The audience arose and sang "America" with enthusiasm and reverence, after which Rev. M. C. Frick pronounced the benediction.

People Fool Themselves,

A great many people fool themselves in the course of their lives. They think they can go on working incessantly with hand and brain and not come to the need of medicine.

They find they can't.

And then many of them fool themselves again by accepting a substitute for Hood's Sarsaparilla, wich is by far the best medicine we know of for restoring health and strength and building up the whole system.

Welcome Visitors.

Messrs. D. F. Fortney, A. C. Mingle and H. P. Harris, of the Bellefonte schools were in Clearfield Tuesday inspecting the High School, especially the Manuel Training Department. Judge Smith, former member of the Board, President W. H. Patterson and Supt. Trout had the visitors in charge. They expressed themselves as greatly pleased with what they saw.

The writer well remembers a former visit of Mr. Fortney's to the Clearfield schools. It was in 1875 when his brother G. W. Fortney was Principal of the Leonard Graded schools. Several good boys had transegressed one or more of Prof. Fortney's celebrated rules and were kept in for punishment. Now if there was one pastime in this world the Professor loved to indulge in better than all others it was whaling healthy boys. He seemed to glory in it and the more they squirmed the better he was satisfied with himself. On one occasion after he had exercised his muscle on a certain "good boy" for half an hour or more he confided to one of the assistants. "Oh, how I do like to whale—— ——," giving his reasons for preferring that kind of physical culture.

Well, that particular evening when "Dave" was visiting the school the Professor was in good trim for indulging in his favorite pastime, as he was mad clear through. He called the writer up first and went at him in his usual vigorous style. David watched the proceedings rather closely and wasn't much impressed. After a few minutes the Prof. stood the first victim aside and called another.

The second victim bucked some after several red hot blows fell across his neck and shoulders, protected only by a hickory shirt. When a boy bucked Prof. Fortney was in his element. He could then throw off all attempt at restraint and go at him the way he felt. That is what he did that evening and about the time he was most deeply interested "Dave" interfered. He grabbed the Professor and made a few pointed remarks about men with ugly tempers being unfit to chastise school boys, etc. We don't remember his actual words, but the effect is still very clear. There was no more "whaling" that evening or for several days thereafter.

The writer has always had a warm side for D. F. Fortney ever since. He was a very welcome visitor to the Clearfield schools that day. He has always taken a deep interest in public school matters and has served on the Bellefonte Board for over 25 years.—Clearfield Republican.

Fish Shuts Down a Mill.

The extensive flour mill of Samuel Philips, on White Deer creek, about two and one-half miles from Elimsport, has been shut down for several days in order to repair the damages sustained to the machinery in a most peculiar manner, says the Gazette and Bulletin.

On Tuesday of this week, while the mill was being operated in the usual placid manner the force was startled by the sudden breaking of the ponderous water wheel which supplies the power, the solid oak plank and iron work being splintered and twisted into a useless mass in a very few revolutions. Other portions of the plant were also damaged.

A search was immediately instituted to ascertain the cause of the catastrophe. Embedded in the wrecked wheel were particles of flesh and the water dyed red. Horrible thoughts were suggested to the minds of the startled on lookers, as a small child had been in the vicinity but a few moments previous, but further investigation relieved the anxiety when a portion of what proved a mammoth pike was removed from the debris. The largest fragment found measured eighteen inches in length, and old fishermen say the fish could not have been less than four feet in length when alive. The mill is situated nearly five miles from the river.

Another dispatch from Viceroy Alexieff to the Czar says:

"According to reports from the commandant at Port Arthur, the battleships and cruisers went out to meet the enemy, but in consequence of the enemy receiving reinforcements, making his total strength thirty vessels, our squadron returned to the roadstead, whereupon the Petropavlovsk touched a mine, resulting in her destruction. Grand Duke Cyril, who was on board, was saved. He was slightly injured. The whole squadron then re entered port. The Japanese are now off Cape Liao Shan. No reports had been received from the acting commander of the fleet up to the time this dispatch was sent."

Home endorsement is the proof that backs every box of Doan's Kidney Pills

Read this case:

W. E. Haines of Beaver Row locomotive engineer says: "I was suffering from an acute lameness in my back and a dull lingering aching over my kidneys. I felt it in my head also and there were pains over my eyes and in the top and back of my head and in the upper part of my spine. I was afraid I would not be able to attend to my duties as I was on night work and had to get rest in the day time for on account of my back and these pains I could not rest well. I read about Doan's Kidney Pills and obtained them from the Bush Block drug store. They proved to be just the remedy I required for they removed the whole trouble."

Chile-the Yankee Land of South America.

Chile is a very rich and powerful country, considering her area and her population of between three and four million people. The opening of the Panama Canal will bring her more than 4 000 miles nearer to the markets of the United States and Europe. Her foreign commerce approximates about $330,000,000 annually, and requires about 8,000 vessels with shipping capacity of over 10,000,000 tons. Her exports exceed her imports by about $40,000,000, and the merchant marine of Chile numbers nearly 200 vessels with a carrying capacity of 100,000 tons. Her passenger steamers, which travel the west coast from Valparaiso to Panama, are amongst the finest coastwise vessels in the world, and when the canal is completed we may expect to see the proud flag of Chile in northern harbors daily.

The State railways in present operations extend more than 1,500 miles and are valued at over $100,000,000. These, together with the private railways, give the republic more than 3,000 miles of railroad. The state railways transport annually more than 7,000,000 passengers and over 3,000,000 tons of freight. In Santiago, which is the capital of the country, there are more than 60 miles of electric tramway. The Chilean post offices handle 50,000,000 pieces annually, and the postal money-order department more than $10.000.000 There are 15,000 miles of telegraph and telephones connecting all the principal towns in the republic. —G. Found Asbestos.

Oil City Blizzard.

A report is in circulation, which, if true, means a great deal for Stoneboro. Some of the most prominent citizens of the place claim that they have discovered a fine yield of asbestos on the hill above Lakeside park, near that town. The first vein struck is said to be three feet thick and they have not explored over twenty feet into the side of the hill. It is understood that a local company is being quietly organized and that the deposit will be developed. No other deposit of asbestos is known to exist in this State, and if the claim should be a good one it will be of inestimable value to Stoneboro and the surrounding country.

PHYSICAL TRAINING OF CHILDREN.

Inequalities in the Child's Training Study ofSymmetrical Development.

BY CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK,
Author of "Cradle and Nursery," "First Aid to the Young Housekeepers," "Housekeeping Made Easy," "What to Eat," "In City Tents,

(Copyright, 1904, by Christine Herrick.)

A healthy, well developed body is the best gift a child can receive. When I say this I do not mean to cast any reflection upon the value of the trained mind or to depreciate the benefits of a thorough education. But these are of comparatively small value if the body is sickly. I do not forget that such men as Prescott, Parkman, Herbert Spencer and a long list of other noble students accomplished their great works in spite of painful and wearing physical disability. They had a message to deliver to the world and they compelled their bodies to yield to their minds. But they were exceptions. As a rule the mind is more or less in bondage to the body. If the man or woman is to make the best of his or her mental equipment, the physique must be brought to its highest perfection.

It is never too early to begin to do this. Those of us who have trained children mentally and morally know that the work is started when the babies are in the cradle. The habits of obedience may not be pre-natal, but they should be formed so soon to the child.

Perhaps it may seem absurd to demand as much for the child's body,—but we do not know what we might have made of it if we had given it more intelligent attention. Even as it is the mother soon learns that the child must not lie in unnatural postures, that the eyes must be cared for, that the back must be kept straight and not exerted too soon, that the limbs must be rubbed and flexed if they do not develop as they should. The child must not be allowed to sit up alone, to stand or to walk too early, lest there be curvatures or malformations.

All this is done while the baby is a wee thing, but what is done in the line of intelligent physical guidance when he—or she—is able to go about and make a way through the world? When this point is reached the children are allowed to look out for themselves. They may be encouraged to take active exercise,—though, indeed, Nature generally leads them to do this,—but the parents are too few who direct the exercise their children take and see for themselves that the youngsters set about it in the right way. The boys go with other boys and so learn to play baseball and football, to swim, to row, to ride a wheel. The girls meet other girls and roll hoop, skip ropes, and bicycle. And the father and mother feel that they have done the whole duty of parents when they provide the means for these out door enjoyments. It seldom occurs to them to make sure that they have secured just what the children's physical nature demands,—much less to see that the help to exercise is used in a way to enable the child to get from it what he or she needs.

Let us take the case of the bicycle, for instance,—selecting this because of the revival in bicycle riding which is taking place all over the country. There was a time when it was a fad, and like most fads, it was abused. There was never a good thing yet, that was not susceptible of misuse, and the bicycle is a shining example of the fact. A few years ago everyone rode a wheel. Every child wanted one and the American parents, who is indulgent, if he does not always act with the intelligence he puts into business matters, provides his children with what they wanted. Having done that, he felt that his responsibility had ceased. He had given the children what they asked for, and that ended the matter for him.

But not for the children. Being children, they promptly proceeded to go ahead, with the one object in view of having a good time. They may have had a few lessons in riding, but it is quite as likely as not that it was not from an instructor, but from a playmate. Some children, of the "born rider" variety, had no trouble, but rode at once and rode well. Others had a bad seat and a bad attitude from the first. Quite probably their wheels had not been selected properly and were not adapted to their height or their length or limb. If their wheels did not run easily,—and in those days the bicycle was a rather different proposition from what it is today,—they took it as a matter of course and proceeded to strain themselves instead of developing their muscles. They evolved for themselves what they thought the best way to ride, and there appeared a horde of "monkey backs." Or they became enthusiasts in riding and went on long runs, setting themselves to make or break a record among their companions. The while the parents told complacently of the exploits of their children and never seemed to think that there might be harm doing. In point of fact men and women were not unfrequently led into excess in this exhilarating exercise and as a natural sequence there came a reaction and the bicycle for a time was neglected.

Despite the passing of the fad, however, there has been from the outset a goodly number of people who believe in the bicycle and thought it had other uses than a mere means of getting about the country and riding to and from work. Their faith has been justified by the healthy revival of which I have spoken, a revival that has been helped on by the sensible utterances of physicians on the subject. When one well known doctor says, "I have often given bicycling the preference as a mode of exercise above horseback riding and boating; with an early start in childhood it might take the place of gymnastics through life."—the parent who has thought seriously of the physical development of his sons and daughters feels that it is perhaps well to look into this matter of bicycling in some other light than that of an amusement.

To get the full benefit from a bicycle for a growing boy or girl, the wheel should not be bought at random. At one time the acquisition of a bicycle sank to pretty much the same standing as one of the "given-away-with-a pound-of-tea" prizes. The market was flooded with cheap wheels and the getting one was a sort of catch-as-catch-can business. But we have changed all that. Now, when a boy or a girl is to have a wheel, it is selected to fit. What will do for one will not answer for another and the makers of wheels have learned that the worst service they can do their products is to send out one that is not entirely satisfactory. No longer can one buy a bicycle from a responsible firm on the hit-or-miss plan.

Here some one will rise with a tale of how he bought a wheel for his boy and it did not last him any length of time at all. "He gave it no more wear than I gave mine, but it was so poorly build that it went to pieces before he had had it a month. That cured me of high priced wheels! Get a boy a cheap one and let him use that up and then get him another."

That principle may have applied once, but its day is over. The modern juvenile bicycle produced by a first class house are strongly built, to meet the knock-about usage of the younger generation. They are made of the same high-grade material and receive the same care in the making as the adult models. As a matter of course, if a boy is absolutely reckless with them he is able to ruin them—as he would anything else of value,—but instruction in taking decent care of his goods and chattels in, or should be, part of his training.

The wheel purchased, the boy should be taught a few things about it. For one thing, that it is not necessary for him to ride doubled up over his handle bars when he is making an ordinary trip for business or for pleasure. It is entirely possible for him to get over the ground at a good rate while he is in an absolute upright position and if this is impressed upon him and he follows rules he will grow straighter because of his bicycle riding. I have seen this successfully tried with more than one boy. Next, he should be taught that if he wishes to bend over in scorching he does not injure himself so long as he leans straight forward, bending at the waist. It is the crouching position that stoops and rounds the shoulders.

Moderation in the use of the wheel should be enforced. Like every other good thing it is possible to have too much of it if it is taken at the wrong time. The lad who starts out no a ride the moment he had finished a meal and scorches across the country on a hot day with a full stomach has himself to blame and not the wheel if he upsets his digestion. It would be fortunate if it were only the boys who did this. There are men and women, too, who have no better sense than to follow this course.

All that has been said of the value of the physical training gained by the boys who use the wheel applies with equal force to girls of the same age. It is a mistake to think that what helps the boy to develop his body will be of no use to the girl in the improvement of hers. I often question if the girl does not perhaps need it more even than the boy. While she is still a child the best thing that can be done for her is to encourage her in the tomboy life, so far as it leads her into the fresh air and vigorous exercise. If she has the right kind of a mother she will have all the refining and feminizing influence she needs to make her the sort of gentlewoman one wishes a young girl to become.

Of course, there is such a thing as overdoing the out door life and the physical side, just as there is a possibility of excess on the other side. But the evenly balanced man or women must have plenty of both sorts of training. There has never yet been found a better combination than a healthy mind in a healthy body.

Don't Put Pins in Your Mouth.

Mrs. Edward Koons, of Hughesville, while visiting her daughter in Jersey Shore, placed a pin in her mouth, and swallowed it as she reached above her head for something. Since that time Mrs. Koons has constantly experienced a choking sensation and it is believed the pin has punctured and lodged in her windpipe. Physicians have thus far been unable to remove the pin. Her condition is becoming alarming.

SOFT CORE

Like the running brook, the red blood that flows through the veins has to come from somewhere.

The springs of red blood are found in the soft core of the bones called the marrow and some say red blood also comes from the spleen. Healthy bone marrow and healthy spleen are full of fat.

Scott's Emulsion makes new blood by feeding the bone marrow and the spleen with the richest of all fats, the pure cod liver oil.

For pale school girls and invalids and for all whose blood is thin and pale, Scott's Emulsion is a pleasant and rich blood food. It not only feeds the blood-making organs but gives them strength to do their proper work.

The verdict of $8,000, which was some months ago awarded Herman Fulmer, of Jersey Shore, by the court of Lycoming county, in his suit for damages against the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad company, was reversed by Judge Dean, of the supreme court, sitting in Philadelphia on Monday. Fulmer was a car repairer in the company's employ and while working underneath a string of cars on the repair track, other cars were pushed in upon the same track and as a result Fulmer had his left leg injured so badly that amputation was necessary.

—Already the veterans are preparing for the coming Memorial day. The flight of time, the thinning ranks and the tottering forms of those left behind have a tendency to increase reverence for the day. Therefore the recurrence of the anniversary should be made more sacred in its observance. The average age of the survivors of the war is now past 60 years and the decrease from year to year is very great indeed. The soldiers of 1861-65 will soon be but a memory, —Miss Mehltable Plunkett in "Ye singin' Skule" certainly has her own time trainin' her pupils to "rise and fall the scale." The efforts of Betsey Martin and Moses Simpkins are very funny.

—Ed Miller the jolly proprietor of the hotel at Sandy Ridge has had his house completely overhauled. Many improvements being made, among them repapered, repainted and trimmed up in fine style by Randal Graham and a corp of painters from Philipsburg.

—Many of the wheat fields on the Muncy hills and in Black Hole valley, Lycoming county, have the appearance of having had the spotted fever, with the spots remaining. Wherever the snow blew away—and that is about one-half the area—wheat is frozen out. Some places the farmers are turning the ground over for oats.

—John Watson better known among his many friends as "Jack" met with an accident on Wednesday in which he might have lost his limb. He is a brakeman on the Snow Shoe branch of the P. R. R, and when in the act of making a coupling he slipped between the cars and his foot and ankle were badly squeezed and bruised. He was taken to his parents home at Milesburg where medical attendance was summoned and gave him the proper treatment.

—Fire was discovered in the kitchen of the Altoona hotel at Altoona shortly before five Tuesday morning. The fire department was called and in the meantime attaches of the hotel set to work arousing the guests, some of whom, being so suddenly awakened became panic stricken and appeared in the office scantily attired. The loss is slight, probably amounting to $75, covered by insurance. Comparatively little inconvenience was caused by it, as breakfast was served as usual. Landlord F. D. Ray presented a check for $25 to the Firemen's Relief association in appreciation of the firemen's effective work.

—Wednesday April 13 Orlando Bryan, of Roland, who left his home shortly after dinner, was walking the track of the Bald Eagle Valley railroad, two miles distant from Milesburg, when he discovered a broken rail in the track. The train that leaves Tyrone at 12.25 was then nearly due, and Mr. Bryan realizing that it would be difficult for him to flag the train ran to Milesburg station, arriving there just in time to catch the train and give the word that there was a broken rail in the track on a stretch of road where trains run very rapidly, sometimes as fast as a mile a minute if behind time and want to make up the shortage. The break was a pretty bad one and would doubtless have caused a wreck.

—The bigest pay for one month in the history of the Pennsylvania Railroad company in Altoona is now being distributed among the shop employes. It aggregates for the Juniata car and machine shops the magnificent total of $612,00. The Juniata shops were paid Friday, while the car shop men were made happy Saturday morning. The machine shop employes did not get their money until Monday. The big pay is directly due to the unexampled prosperity of the Pennsylvania railroad. While there was some retrenchment this spring, which is an annual occurrence yet it has not affected Altoona to any extent. The shops are at the present time crowded with work and working overtime to get it out. It was the great amount of overtime made by the men during the month of March, for which they are now being paid that made the big handsome checks.

Japan and Her War.

The most fascinating series of war stories that has yet come to America of the conflict of the Russian and the Jap is that from Will Levington Comfort in The Pittsburg Dispatch, which began two weeks ago. Mr. Comfort is a young writer who has already achieved distinction in two wars, having served with the United States troops in Puerto Rico during 1898, and then spent three years in the Philippines, where he wrote some of the most thrilling war tales that have been published since the days of the Rebellion.

Mr. Comfort sees war from the standpoint of the soldier, the man in the ranks rather than the general. He will follow the march of the forces of the Mikado through Korea, and his discriptions of the scenes during the actual land fighting are looked forward to with interest by those who have read his wonderful stories of the Philippine struggle. Mr. Mr. Camfort will write from the Far East exclusively for The Dispatch.
